Northern Ireland Social Care Council

Are you interested in social work and social care research and evidence?

- Maintaining a curious mind to discover and understand day-to-day problems affecting people's lives?
- Providing the best solutions for each individual you work alongside?
- Ensuring that your professional decisions are evidence-based?
- Delivering confident and safe practice?

As the regulator for social work and social care in Northern Ireland, the Northern Ireland Social Care Council, focus on how what we do can support better outcomes for the people who use services and provide them.

It is our aim that our work is informed by evidence and that evidence is constantly examined and updated.

Research can sometimes seem out of reach or something that only academics can do, but that is not the case. Research and evidence is for everyone.

Have you ever considered how research and evidence might help you to do this?

Research is about us all being curious in what we do and asking straightforward questions such as 'what if?' and 'why not?'

These questions are important in a learning culture.
